

The Learning Lecture Series Presents

Repercussions of Concussion

Dr. Vincent Schaller and Dr. Alyssa Skolfield

Our children are at risk for a concussion at any age – it is just part of being an active kid. It might be the result of a fall, a car crash, or a sports injury. No matter how a concussion happens, symptoms do not always develop right away. It may take days before signs of a problem might appear. Many kids, unaware they have been hurt, try to pick themselves up and get back to whatever they were doing, which is dangerous.

All adults interacting with active children need to understand evolving information regarding prevention, symptoms and treatment of concussion in today's fast-paced world. Our overwhelming access to data should be balanced by credible dialogue with professionals familiar with our communities.
